

EXTRACTS FROM A NEW DICTIONARY OF ARCHIVES TERMINOLOGY

By Jody Baltessen

First place in the 2025 On Creative Writing Poetry Contest accelerated aging test – noun – use of surrogate materials to mimic vulnerabilities and negative interactions

I follow my shadow down the dreaming road, past open water, glacial erratics, white birch peeling scrolls of faithful text – up above the sky is a fever, an arc of light fracturing red orange bronze

the road curves into a meadow wet with recent rain I pass a grazing deer, her nose pushing into lowbush blueberry she looks up regards my posture, something about my shoulders, the way they curl forward as if to cradle my heart, save it from the downward pull of gravity heat mantles / time escalates / the earth beneath our feet unfastens

"It's just a dream," she says outside the window, daylight tempers the fractious sky I think about

our prospects the science of surface heat – anomalies / short-term variations / long-term trends the faint hope of ingenuity – count backward from projected life expectancy tally my meager allotment of future days all the while terrestrial migration, meadows deer blueberries trending north glaciers collapsing, moving slowly toward cessation – on cold days

I ache in my bones, calcium leaching into flayed cartilage, each hairline fissure a further compression, my stature diminished and ice, her blue heart exposed keens over stillborn firn, over lost compaction, what can she do but melt and melt and calve her lovelies into the welling sea – slow archives – noun – practises that support flexibility build relationships and collaboration to remediate prior harm a campfire inside a rusted grill free burns through scavenged wood, follows its nature a hunger, points a blue finger toward aspen pine willow birch between the trees, heat hangs translative, burdens the high loft of leaves the sugar and green of cells dividing, a lineage ripening somewhere in this elegance, a pine beetle sinks its mandibles into tender bark tastes the heady lager of phloem, follows its nature a hunger, carves its place smoke billows up from the smoldering char of our fire flattens under a lip of cool air descending – in the all black, our eyes tear up dilate into a darkness tempered by fragile faith – spirit duplication – noun – method of copying using aniline dye ink dissolved in alcohol and bound with resin; unstable, soluble in water in the country of my mother, plain of shadow and light, a line of time unites us

I try to map our chronology – cheekbones, the bridge of her nose sage green eyes, the dappled skin of her belly – all I remember is how she moved, the weather in her wake

Please do not copy or reproduce this material without the permission of On Creative Writing and Jody Baltessen.